

COMMENTING GUIDELINES

Rule #1: Keep it positive and constructive

It's easy to jump online and just start bashing things. Anyone can just trash a specific car and call out all the issues, but it will add way more value to our users if you can be constructive and offer some of your personal experiences to drive a positive conversation. Sure, some cars might suck in your eyes but that doesn't mean you bring down the conversation. Remember.....One mans' trash is another mans treasure.

Rule #2: Cyber Bullying is not on

In today's age we are all entitled to an opinion even if you don't agree. Any online abuse, character assassination, swearing, bagging out of general tastes and brand allegiances will not be tolerated. If this does happens and is deemed as abuse, Throttle Trader has the right to formally ban you from the forum and website.

Rule #3: Share Experiences

We are trying to build a community of like-minded avid people, so if you do know about a specific car and all it entails, share it! If you know the ins and outs, why not share and educate and become that subject matter expert about the time you spent restoring or owning that car. Likewise, if you do not know, then don't make assumptions, read the comment thread a little and you might learn something.

Rule #4: Comments is not a Classified section

If you want to sell your car, please submit it to us via the submission form. Any car advertising, wish lists, email addresses, and phone numbers posted to the comments is not in the spirit of the site and will be removed,

Rule #5: The Price is the Price

Please do not comment about the overall price of a vehicle. This is a live auction site and there will always be people who are willing to purchase a vehicle that is within their budget. Market availability and overall buyer's desire will determine the price, so saying something is too expensive is not really adding anything to the overall conversation. If you feel that strongly about a specific price, gather some facts and show a comparable sale.
